Fegar Wallace might have written strict autobiography and still be "King of the Thrillers"—as an illegitimate London ragamuffin, he live reckless, later becoming soldier, gambler, journalist and finally publy perhaps the most popular and prolific author in all entertainment genty and 30's. Naturally, he created a fictional detective; surprisingly, was Mr. J. G. Reeder, Public Prosecutor's Office, London—the shyest, timin of men—in short, the most un-Wallace—like character ever. Yet tiring thinker is the hero of stories that, "for entertainment in its are unsurpassed" (Howard Haycraft). Mr. Reeder first appeared in 1924 tales were first gathered in this book:

The Murder Book of J. G. Reeder, Edgar Wallace. Eight Stounabridged republication of the work first published by A. Burt Co., New York, n.d. 128pp. 5 3/8 x 8½. 24374-5 pa.

A timorous soul? Outwardly. But let Mr. Reeder speak for himsel perversion," he said, 'It is a terrible misfortune, but it is true. I everything...in dying rose bushes, in horseshoes—in poetry even. I be a criminal. It is deplorable!"

Mr. Reeder is indifferent to common interests: food, clothin no holidays, and when unoccupied sits in on magistrate's court, a others find trivial. These eight cases (by no means trivial—the detective library "cornerstone") find him more fearful of treadin jealous toes than on those of the criminal—and more flustered by pretty woman than by threats of revenge from incarcerated enemies Margaret Belman, whose pretty path crosses Reeder's in several st thieves, embezzlers, forgers and murderers in The Poetical Police Sheer Melodrama, The Investors, etc., really know what secrets Re (frock coat, bowler hat, tightly furled umbrella) conceal.

Leslie Charteris, author of the Saint tales, once remarked o "extraordinary versatility, which I don't think any other writer fans of Wallace and new seekers of mystery chills will find the "at his best in this, Mr. Reeder's rare and unusual premiere.

So order today—strange secrets lie hidden within these hand modestly priced pages!
